Development and learning takes place in all domains, development in one domain influences the other domain

Children's development and learning follows a sequence in which later acquired abilities (skills and concepts) build upon what children already know and apply

Child Development and Learning are characterized by individual variation

Children develop holistically and benefit from experiential learning

Learning begins from birth

Development and learning result from a continuous interaction of biological maturation and experience

There are critical periods in development

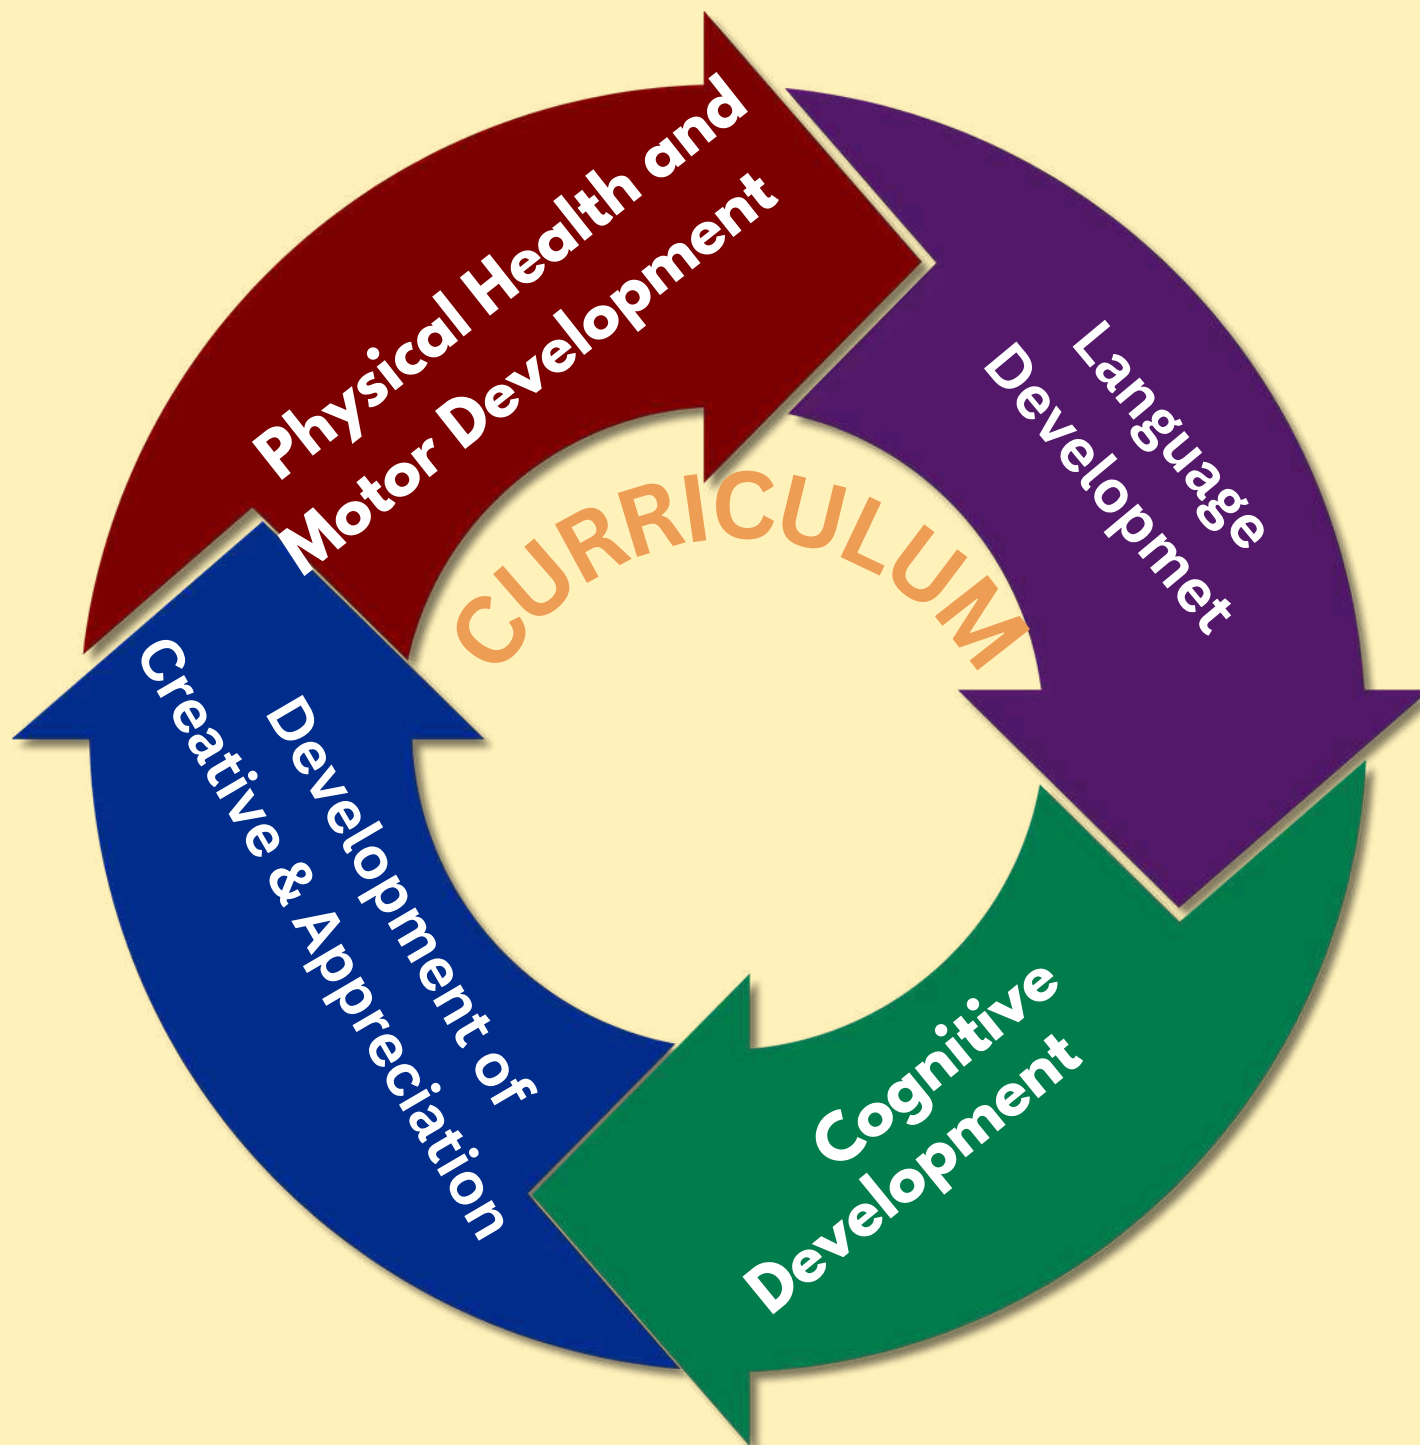

Children's learning reflects a recurring spiral that begins in awareness, and moves to exploration, to inquire and finally to apply : Children learn and develop in a stimulating / nurturing /supportive / protective environment

Development and learning is largely influenced by the social and cultural context of the children

Children's have curiosity and desire to learn

Children learn through play
